The Moving Picture Boy entry:

“It was Julien Duvivier who discovered the curly-haired Michael Ande and put him in his Franco-German co-production "MARI-ANNE". Ande and Oliver Grimm (his junior by 3½ years, but earlier on the scene) were the two golden children of German cinema in the Fifties. They were together in "GRIFF NACH DEN STERNEN", and again (with Günther Hoffmann) in R.A. Stemmle's "MAJESTÄT", a trio-adventure in which Ande plays the young King Maximilian II of Slovakia, Grimm a child film-star and Hoffman a hotel lift-boy. All three came well out of the romp.

In "DAS HIRTENLIED" Michael was a little goatherd, in the TRAPP films (sadly lacking the verve of "THE SOUND OF MUSIC") was the elder Trapp boy, and in "DER SCHÖNSTE TAG MEINES LEBENS" ended up as a Wiener Sängerknabe. In "SKANDAL IN ISCHL" he was an Archduchess's ailing grandson, but in "DON VESUVIO" died a noble death as a Neapolitan urchin. The sheer Peter-Pannishness of Michael Ande was well illustrated when at the age of 21 he played a quite convincing Jim Hawkins in a TV version of "Treasure Island": "Die Schatzinsel" (W Germany/France '66). His few cinema films in this period included "VERDAMMT ZUR SÖNDE" ('64). From 1976, after more TV work, he partnered Siegfried Löwitz in the long-running cop series "Der Alte".”
