*The anglicised title makes it sound like a US midweek TV movie.
Russian cinema is generally far more gritty than that.*

On the other hand, these do look uncharacteristically well-dressed and snug for Russian orphans...

CVMC video retail/rental website review:

"An emotionally distraught young woman takes a job at an orphanage housing children roughly three to seven years of age. Might she there find a solution to the cause of her problems? A decently done slice-of-life drama which includes vignettes about a spanking-happy caretaker, bed-wetting and more. Recommended!

Rated NR: adult themes [sic]; violence; moderate nudity
Language: Russian

Categories: Boy Films, Little to Preteen, Drama, Girl Films, Little to Preteen, Orphans & Street Kids

NOTE: This movie is in Russian with NO ENGLISH SUBTITLES OR DUBBING."

No further information currently available. Since the demise of the Soviet Union several UK TV documentaries have clucked over the parlous state of Russian orphanages and children's homes (as they also did in Roumania). With the economy on the critical list, and teachers, doctors and armed forces going months without pay, institutions to house the country's surplus children did not figure high on anyone's priority list (except western camera teams). Whether these conditions are reflected in this film remains to be seen.
