Sunday Times review:

“A delightful film, set in rural Ireland in 1954, stars 10-year old screen veteran Ciaran Fitzgerald as a lad who is believed to have seen a vision of the Virgin Mary. The parish priest (very well played by Tom Wilkinson) is convinced that a miracle has occurred, but he does appear to be a few beads short of the full rosary. As a circus of media people, pilgrims and the terminally sick hits the town, the boy's father (Kevin McNally) steps in to pull his son back down to earth. This is a picturesque and evocative movie given effective edge by its writer and director, Barry Devlin.”

See subject index under RELIGION. The recent remake of "WAR OF THE BUTTONS" was set around the same period, and shot in West Cork. Fitzgerald co-starred with Ruaidhri Conroy in the Irish film "INTO THE WEST" (93) about two young brothers who escape from Dublin on horseback, but two films do not a screen veteran make.
