Waiting for the cane to make its mark on his backside – just one of the memories of school he'll cherish forever

Halliwell's Television Companion review:

"Cosy drama series set in a potty boys' prep school in the fifties, with Richard Pasco recycling his "Sorrel and Son" characterisation to become the widowed headmaster. Problems on his problem-list included rebellious son, bank overdraft, squabbling staff and romance with a single parent. Created by Reg Gadney, also written by Maggie Wadey and T.R.Bowen. Produced by Colin Tucker, for LWT."

The Movie and TV Spanking Page caption to this sequence of stills:

"From the BBC series "Drummonds". Two boys are each given three strokes of the cane for being caught out of bounds."

No further information currently available. The boys with the overheated ovals are “Brainhead” and “Tinman”, but the actors are not identified by name. The story – such as we’re given – seems more reminiscent of “To Serve Them All My Days” (BBC 80) than “Sorrell and Son” (YTV 84). In any case, now that British television has plunged into the abyss of lowbrow multiculturalism, we’re not likely to see many more hymns to the middle class prep school.

Plotting mutiny, armed insurrection, or padded underwear at the very least.
