No further information currently available. Naughty, naughty boy. At this stage much if not all of Britain's film-making output could still be categorised as home movies by hobbyists, using members of their own family for their casts. But that only adds to, rather than detracts from, their historical interest. The “feature film” and the “documentary” only began to part company as film-making became more professionalised. Home movies are a rich source of period detail.
