Halliwell's Television Companion review:

“Half-hour situation comedy series for CBS, with Janis Paige as a widowed nightclub singer with a 10-year old daughter.”

How Sweet it Was – Television: A Pictorial Commentary caption:

“Janis Paige starred as a nightclub singer in this 1956 show.”

No further information currently available. Who played the daughter is not identified by either source. Nice still though. Widowed moms and widower dads were almost a staple of TV family sitcoms of the fifties and sixties, though never quite so thick on the ground as orphaned children whom, if we're to believe the “family” movie genre, roamed the country in vast herds, the stragglers being picked off by camera teams like sluggish buffalo.
