Halliwell's Television Companion review:

"Daytime soap opera, on CBS from 1951 to the eighties. The interminable story of two families in Rosehill, USA "

How Sweet it Was – Television: A Pictorial Commentary caption:

"Shortly after "Search For Tomorrow" was launched, "Love of Life" came along, and it too is still going strong. Here are Peggy McCay and Dennis Parnell in the early fifties."

"... The ratings for the 1965 season - which are typical of every other season - show six soap operas among daytime's top ten programmes: "As the World Turns" (the consistent daytime leader), followed by "The Secret Storm", "Search For Tomorrow" (the oldest current soaper), "The Guiding Light", "The Edge of Night" and "Love of Life"..."

No further information currently available. Few if any of these staple US soaps were ever sold for broadcast in the UK, so the archive is not in a position to discuss their relative strengths and shortcomings. Any commentary from US viewers would be welcome. Nothing else is known of Dennis Parnell. He is not listed in The Moving Picture Boy.
