Sunday Times [?] review:

“An update on "QED"'s 1990 film about 12-year old Emmett de Monterey, a cerebral palsy sufferer who travelled to America to undergo a high-tech operation on his deformed legs to help him to walk normally. The operation was hideous, involving computer analysis, the breaking and re-setting of bones, muscle transference and the lengthening of hamstrings. Then, just before Christmas, he was told he should go through surgery again a year later. Emmett appears full of healthy, normal feelings about his condition. He is, he says, expected to be a celebrity and "an angel from the waist up".”
