Speelfilm Encyclopedie review:

"Small boy accidentally discovers a substance in a chemistry lab that makes him invisible. Crooks are quickly on the trail to kidnap him and his secret. Low-budget children's film with many predictable special effects and scant inventiveness. *½ "

No further information currently available. "Low budget – predictable – scant inventiveness". Then we don't need to ask who produced this little marvel, do we? And in case there's any residue of doubt, the plot involves bungling crooks, just like every other title they made! Raymond Boal was 12. Many of the other named cast will be children also, but none of them are known to me from other films.
